Plastic lake

Last summer I visited my friend Pier in Italy. He had invited his cousins Claudio and Marta to stay too, so the four of us had a great time. His village is in the mountains but not too far from the sea. We enjoyed exploring the countryside and visiting a castle beside a lake where his mum used to work.

One morning, we decided to take the bus from Pier's village to the lake. We packed some lunch and left the house early, but by the time we got to the station the bus had already left. Pier said we could also take a train but in the end we decided to cycle as it was warm. There were lots of people walking on the path to the lake, so we had to be careful.

By the time we got to the lake, it had become very hot and we were all thirsty. Claudio shared some water with us all and we immediately felt better. There weren't many people there – Pier told us that the lake was very cold, so people didn't use to go there much. But the sand was beautiful and we found a nice comfortable picnic table to relax and have our lunch.

When we had finished eating, we went for a walk around the lake. Marta pointed at something strange in the water. 'That's a water bottle', said Pier. 'Look – there is plastic everywhere by the lake. What a mess!' Then Claudio said 'Let's pick up the plastic. We need to protect the wildlife.' We all agreed and soon we had collected a lot of plastic bottles and other waste. 'Some people have no respect', I said.

When we got home that evening, Pier started looking for environmental organisations to help reduce plastic waste. 'There's one that's based in a town not far from here', he said. 'Maybe we can go tomorrow?' Marta agreed. 'Great idea. We can ask them to organise an event to remove rubbish from the lake. We made some progress today but we need more people!'
