F Read the story. Then read the statements and decide if the information is True, False, or Not Given.

When I was younger, I used to audition for any type of role that would allow me to survive as an actor in New York and give me more varied experience. So I was very happy when I was called to audition for a part in a TV commercial. They paid relatively well and I had never worked in one.

Before the audition started, we had to answer a questionnaire. One of the questions was about all the types of skills we had. Could we dance, sing, mime, tell jokes, etc.? They didn't ask how well we could do these things or tell us how much experience we should have, so I just checked all the boxes. After all, I had been trained to do all of them at drama school, so I was not lying.

Then, when the audition was about to start, they announced that we would also have to sing a little, and that they were giving us a few minutes to choose a song. Any song. I panicked. It was true that I had had singing lessons at school, but it was also true that my reputation as a singer had been a pretty bad one. But there was no way out, so I tried to be rational, calm down, and think of a simple song I could deliver in an acceptable way.

Of course my performance was a disaster. And, although the acting part hadn't been so bad, I lost all hope of getting the job. So I won't deny I was extremely surprised when they called a week later and offered me the part! It turns out that the role in the commercial was that of a pretty bad singer, so they were actually looking for someone who could act but not sing. Well, I don't want to boast, but my singing in that commercial was absolutely "perfect".
