TAPESCRIPT

Interviewer: On today's programme we have teenage photographer Martina Lewis with us. When did you become interested in photography, Martina?

Martina: Well, I got my first camera when I was fourteen and I've just had my eighteenth birthday, so that was a few years ago. I won a photography competition and started taking photos for newspapers and magazines when I was sixteen.

Interviewer: Martina, what do you usually take pictures of?

Martina: Well, I'm a bit different from most of my friends who like taking photos of themselves or places that they visit. Most of my pictures are of big moments in people's lives.

Interviewer: What do you think was your first really good photo?

Martina: Good question. It was about two years ago. It was the last day of school. I was waiting for my brother when I saw a group of older boys from his football team. They were shouting and hitting each other.

Interviewer: Were they fighting?

Martina: They were enjoying themselves, actually. They were leaving school and they looked so happy. I found my mobile and I caught that moment on camera.

Interviewer: But that wasn't the photo that won, was it?

Martina: No. After that, I looked for more special moments. I've taken lots of photos of people getting married, some of university students getting their degree and even a few people getting their driving licence.

Interviewer: So which photo won the first prize?

Martina: It was called 'My First Day'. Last year my aunt Lucy had her first baby – my first cousin! I went to visit Lucy and her little boy a few hours after he was born. My grandma was there too. They all looked so happy that I had to take a photo of the baby.

Interviewer: Well, congratulations again, Martina ...
