The Cuckoo Clock (1877) Mary Louisa Molesworth

In an old town, in an old street, there stood a very old house. You can hardly see such a house nowadays as it belonged to a time now quite passed away.

It stood in a street, but yet it was not like a town house,

- 5 for though the front faced the pavement, from the back windows you saw a beautiful garden, with old trees growing so close together that in summer it was like living on the edge of a forest.
- Time seemed to stand still in and all about the old house,
- 10 perhaps the house and the people who lived there had got so old that they could not get any older or change.
- But one day a change came. Late one autumn afternoon a carriage drove up to the door of the old house. In the carriage was a little girl in a grey dress, a grey hat and grey
- 15 gloves – all grey together, even to her eyes, all except her round rosy face and bright brown hair. Her name even was rather grey, for it was Griselda.
- A gentleman lifted her out of the carriage and disappeared with her into the house. Shall we go inside to see more?

- 20 Up the wide stairs an old servant leads a tired and drowsy Griselda to the room prepared for her. It was a strange room – everything in the house was strange; but in the dancing light of the fire it looked cheerful enough. 'I am glad there's a fire,' said the child. 'Will it burn till the
 - 25 morning, do you think?'
- The old servant shook her head.
